The member of the US California assembly recognizes Khojaly massacre
(March 25, 2009)

Member of the US California Legislature Assembly Felipe Fuentes sent a letter to the President of Azerbaijan Ilham Aliyev on Khojaly massacre

“I am joining Azerbaijani-Americans and the citizens of the Republic of Azerbaijan as they mourn victims of the Khojaly tragedy, which took place on February 26, 1992. On that day, over 613 Azerbaijani civilians lost their lives and hundreds more were injured in what the Human Rights Watch described as “the worst massacre to date” in the war between neighboring Armenia and Azerbaijan. International eyewitness accounts state that the attack on Khojaly was carried out jointly by Armenian forces and Russian troops based in the region. Peaceful resolution of the Armenia-Azerbaijan conflict and justice for perpetrators of war crimes are important for ending violence against civilians throughout the world. I support the efforts of the U.S. State Department to bring about peaceful solutions to the existing conflicts in the Caucasus and express my condolences to the families of Khojaly”, Fuentes said in his letter.

Assembly member Felipe Fuentes made this statement not conceding to the pressure of local Armenian Diaspora and pro-Armenian legislators.

Students also expressed their support to the Justice for Khojaly campaign and hoped this kind of massacres never happen again.

“My students were listening to me attentively while talking about Khojaly massacre. I saw fear and sorrow in their eyes. However, I understand that all people as well as children should know about the truth of history and what happened in Khojaly, Azerbaijan. Innocent inhabitants of small town were massacred, 83 children were killed, and many children lost their parents. They [students] asked me several times why Armenians killed children, but I found no word to answer. It is even hard for me to understand why to kill children who did not hurt anyone in their life,” said Ms. Imas, the English teacher in Indonesia.

Justice for Khojaly International civil awareness campaign is aimed at raising international civil awareness through demonstration of creative photos and images of suffered people in the Karabakh conflict and Khojaly Massacre and reaching out globally via media, internet and live events. Photos demonstrating human opposition to massacres and dissemination based on all forms of racial, ethnic or religious discrimination, solidarity with the innocent victims and suffering children of the Khojaly massacre, call on removing the root cause of the conflict - ending the aggression by the Armenia in the Nagorno Karabakh region of Azerbaijan. "A purpose of the rap song "Justice to Khojaly" is to bring the truth concerning the genocide committed by Armenians in Khojaly to the attention of the world community," the OIC Youth Forum Secretary General Elshad Iskandarov said at the event held in TREND News Agency on Monday.

Armenian troops committed genocide in Khojaly on Feb. 26, 1992. The tragedy began early morning. Within hours, over 613 unarmed Azerbaijani citizens were killed. Twenty-five children lost both of their parents and 130 children lost one of them. About 1,275 people were taken prisoner. Around 150 people went missing. Eight families were completely killed.

Iskandarov said within the campaign "Justice for Khojaly" famous American arranger Gordon Williams and U.S. rap singer, known for his works on social topics, Tony Blackman, signed an appeal to the president, the U.S. Congress calling for the recognition of Khojaly tragedy as a crime against humanity.

The International Information-Propaganda campaign "Justice for Khojaly" was launched on the initiative of the OIC Youth Forum General Coordinator Leyla Aliyeva. "This campaign was presented in more than 20 capitals of the world in February 2009 and successfully held during the year," he said.

Iskandarov said that meetings aimed at recognizing the Khojaly tragedy are also planned to be held in almost 30 countries worldwide on Feb. 26 this year along with the campaign held throughout the year. "During the events the song in the rap-style 'Justice to Khojaly' will be presented. Arranger of the song is Gordon Williams," the general secretary said.

After reading the information on this unprecedented injustice committed against the Azerbaijani people, he decided to act to inform the world community about true facts of the Khojaly tragedy. During the meeting, the campaign initiator Leyla Aliyeva proposed the artist once again to arrive in Azerbaijan and support the campaign "Justice for Khojaly" together with national singers. The American singer has received Aliyeva's proposal with pleasure. He arrived in Baku together with arranger Gordon Williams and presented a song which he has created due to the campaign," Secretary General said.

"I heard about the genocide in Khojaly. But I got the detailed information about this during the visit to Baku last year," Tony Blackman said at the event.

He said the world community should know more information about this genocide. "That's why I participate in the creation of the rap song and the clip for "Justice for Khojaly", the singer said.

The crimes against humanity were committed in Khojaly, Blackman said. "The same happened in Africa. But I have never thought that this could happen in this region", he said.

Iskandarov said the appeal signed by the creative staff of the clip would be also addressed to parliamentarians of European countries and the countries of the Organization of Islamic Conference, besides U.S. congressmen. "We want MPs, both individually and at the level of their parliaments to recognize that the Armenians committed crimes in Khojaly against humanity," the general secretary said.

OIC Parliamentary Assembly adopts resolution backing the “Justice for Khojaly” campaign
(January 30, 2010)

The Parliamentary Assembly of the Organization of the Islamic Conference has adopted a resolution backing the international campaign “Justice for Khojaly” and recognizing Khojaly massacre as a crime against humanity.

The assembly has ended its sixth session in the Ugandan capital, Kampala on January 30, 2010. The organization unites the parliaments of 51 OIC member-states and holds sessions every two years.

A resolution (SSCPE/4-2010/DR/RES.26) "On cooperation between the Islamic Conference Youth Forum for Dialogue and Cooperation (ICYF-DC) and the Parliamentary Assembly of OIC (PUIC)" defining the Khojaly massacre as a crime against humanity was adopted on the last day of the session at the initiative of the OIC Youth Forum. The resolution notes that the events in Khojaly are "massacres committed by Armenian armed forces against Azerbaijani civilians".

The resolution includes a paragraph, urging the parliaments of 51 countries to recognize this tragedy as a crime against humanity and to support the Campaign at the national and international levels. The session also involved representatives of the leading international organizations including the Black Sea Economic Cooperation parliamentary assembly in which Armenia is involved.

Commenting on the importance of the resolution, the Secretary General of the OIC Youth Forum Elshad Iskenderov said. "This is the first time that an international parliamentary assembly has recognized the Khojaly massacre as a 'crime against humanity'. As the OIC Parliamentary Assembly incorporates one-quarter of the world's parliamentarians, the use of this term, which is of great political and legal importance, marks a new stage in the international recognition of the Khojaly massacre as an integral part of the policy of genocide, committed by Armenian nationalists against the Azerbaijani people as well as punishing those responsible for genocide."

The idea to adopt the resolution was initiated by General Coordinator for Intercultural Dialogue of ICYF-DC, the Campaign's initiator, Mrs. Leyla Aliyeva, during her meeting with the international coordinators of the Justice for Khojaly Campaign in autumn last year in Baku. The OIC youth forum worked with several OIC parliaments and primarily the Milli Majlis of Azerbaijan and its secretariat on the resolution.

The Campaign was initiated on May 8, 2008, on the day of 16th the anniversary of the Armenian occupation of the town of Shusha in Nagorno-Karabakh.

The campaign aims to raise awareness of the massacre at Khojaly. During the night of 25-26 February 1992, 613 Azerbaijani civilians were killed in an attack by Armenian forces, backed by an ex-Soviet regiment, on the town of Khojaly in Nagorno-Karabakh. Most of the victims perished as they fled the town.

The Campaign plans to hold conference, outdoor events, and concerts in more than 30 countries and hold exhibitions called "JFK Campaign 1 year" in connection with 18th anniversary of Khojaly Massacre on February 26, 2010.

Islamic group labels Khojaly massacre as crime against mankind (February 3-9, 2010)

The parliamentary assembly of the Organization for Islamic Conference (OIC) has labeled the Khojaly massacre committed by Armenians against Azerbaijanis in 1992 as a crime against humanity in a resolution adopted on Sunday at the sixth OIC session held in Kampala, Uganda, according to the Islamic Conference Youth Forum for Dialogue and Cooperation (ICYFDC) Istanbul headquarters.

The resolution, passed under the Justice for Khojaly international campaign, initiated by Leyla Aliyeva, the Forum's senior coordinator for inter-cultural dialog, terms the massacre as "the Armenian armed forces' mass killings of civilian population".

The resolution voices support for the Justice for Khojaly campaign, urging the parliaments of the 51 OIC member states to recognize the gruesome developments as a crime against humanity and to support the campaign both on the nationwide and international scale.

Elshad Iskandarov, the Forum's secretary-general, commented that the Kampala resolution is the first international document recognizing the Khojaly tragedy as a crime against humankind.

"Given that the OIC parliamentary union comprises a fourth of the world's parliaments and is one of the biggest inter-parliamentary entities in the world, the [use of] this term will pave the way for a new qualitative stage in international recognition of the Khojaly tragedy as being a part of the policy of genocide pursued by Armenian nationalists against the Azerbaijani people and holding those responsible for this crime legally accountable."

The Justice for Khojaly campaign, which was launched in February 2009, is ongoing with the contribution of hundreds of volunteers in over 30 countries. The initiative aims to inform the world community about the tragedy and achieve granting it due political assessment on the world stage.

Armenia and Azerbaijan waged a war in the early 1990s. On February 25-26, 1992, Armenian forces attacked unarmed civilians in Khojaly with the support of the Russian troops. 613 people were brutally killed, while 1,275 taken captives, 487 became handicapped and 150 remain missing. Overall, the war claimed some 30,000 lives and displaced about a million Azerbaijanis. Armenia has been occupying over 20% of Azerbaijan's internationally recognized territory since then. The ceasefire accord was signed in 1994, but peace talks have been largely fruitless so far.

Azerbaijan presents "Justice for Khojaly" short film
(February 24, 2010)

Baku hosted a presentation of the short film "Justice for Khojaly" on the genocide perpetrated by Armenians in Khojaly.

Azerbaijani Deputy Youth and Sport Minister Intigam Babayev said at the presentation ceremony that the Khojaly genocide is proof of the heroism of the Azerbaijani people and movie will promote accurate information about this tragedy abroad.

"The main purpose of producing the video in English is that the public outside the country could share the feelings of the Azerbaijani people in connection with the genocide perpetrated by Armenians," he added.

The clip will be shown in 20 countries Feb.25, and will play a significant role in informing the world community about the tragedy, said Organization of Islamic Conference (OIC) Youth Forum Secretary General Elshad Isgandarov.

He said about 130,000 people from around the world supported the "Justice for Khojaly" campaign through the Web site www.justiceforkhojaly.org.

"Creating a huge number of concurrent Web resources, Armenia tries to resist this propaganda in every way, which again proves the success of our campaign," he said.

Armenian troops committed genocide in Khojaly on Feb. 26, 1992. The tragedy began early morning. Within hours, over 613 unarmed Azerbaijani citizens were killed. Among them were 106 women and 83 children. About 1,000 people were disabled by shots; eight families were fully destroyed. A total of 25 children lost both of their parents and 130 children lost one of them. About 1,275 people were taken prisoner and around 150 people went missing. Eight families were completely killed.

The "Justice for Khojaly" international media campaign was announced upon the initiative of Islamic Conference Youth Forum for Dialogue and Cooperation (ICYF-DC) General Coordinator Leyla Aliyeva May 8, 2008.

One of the most important challenges before the Azerbaijani people is to familiarize the world with the truth about the tragedy committed against the Azerbaijani people, Azerbaijani MP Ganira Pashayeva said.

"The way toward the recognition of the Khojaly tragedy in the world is through the implementation of broad propaganda in the world," she said. "Propaganda must be carried out by modern methods and clips play important role here. This clip shows not the music, but the protest against injustice."

In his speech, Azerbaijani Parliamentary Social Policy Committee Chairman Hadi Rajabli noted about Azerbaijani President Ilham Aliyev's call to the Azerbaijani Diaspora to move from defense to attack in the issue of promoting the truth about Karabakh. "This clip is an indicator of successful launch of this policy," he added.

(February 26, 2010)

Prior to the event, was held a presentation of the clip rap songs in English "Justice for Khojaly".

The event was opened by the head of Russian representation of the Heydar Aliyev Foundation Leyla Aliyeva. At her request, the hall paid a minute of silence to the memory of the victims.

In her opening speech, Leyla Aliyeva told participants of the event about the tragedy of Khojaly residents, hundreds of victims of Armenian aggression, including women, children and the old people.

"On the Khojaly it was told in the European Parliament and the UN headquarters, the building of the ICTY and other international organizations. A rock festival was held in Zurich, as well as numerous activities in universities. This is only part of more than seventy actions, held during the year. The campaign was realized by the variety of methods - conferences, seminars, hearings, pickets, distributing leaflets, stickers", said the head of AYOR.

According to her, during the campaign were implemented unique projects, which pursue a goal to convey the pain of the Azerbaijani people to the very different audiences around the world.

An important part of the campaign "Justice for Khojaly," says Leyla Aliyeva, is the publication of the book of Russian writer-historian and public figure, Yuri Pompeyev "Karabakh Diary". Reliable historical facts about the Armenian-Azerbaijani Nagorno-Karabakh conflict are collected in the book.

Justice for Khojaly was launched a year ago by AYOR together with other international youth organizations. According to Aliyeva, the actions within the program took place in more than 30 countries and covered all continents.

"Youth Forum of the OIC has already raised the issue of recognition of Khojaly tragedy on a global level. Most recently, based on proposals of the Forum of the OIC Parliamentary Council, which consists of the parliaments of 51 countries, put forward a resolution recognizing the events in Khojaly as a crime against humanity. This is a great political achievement. As you see, much has been done, but we are faced to do more to restore justice for the Khojaly in order to such tragedies will never occur", concluded the head of AYOR.

She thanked all those who supports the campaign and takes an active part in it.

"Like the rest of the Azerbaijani people, I believe that the conflict will soon be justly resolved, and the territorial integrity of Azerbaijan will be restored", concluded Leyla Aliyeva.

Azerbaijani Ambassador to Russia Polad Bulbuloglu noted the importance of the campaign "Justice for Khojaly", stressed the role and activity of young people in promoting the truth about the terrible tragedy that befell Azerbaijani people.

"I am pleased that today in this hall came a lot of young people, because you will lead the world in the future. We should not forget about the tragedy that occurred in Khojaly and the violation, which our people have suffered 18 years ago. Our duty is to bring the truth about this tragedy to the whole world", said Polad Bulbuloglu.

According to him, because of this campaign it is felt that the attitude of the international community is gradually changing and this campaign has an effective influence on public opinion in different countries.

"Here I would like to note specially the initiative of Leyla Aliyeva about the campaign "Justice for Khojaly", which now goes around the world, and doers of this idea, young people who really convey the tragedy of Khojaly by all available means - let this be a song in the style of rap or books, photographs, brochures, booklets. We must make the world look at this tragedy with our eyes", said Polad Bulbuloglu.

The Ambassador noted that the present time is full of double standards, "when our people can not prove what is white and what is black" and in this context should not underestimate the importance of this campaign.

As an example, he mentioned an article, which appeared on Friday in Russia's "Nezavisimaya Gazeta" newspaper, devoted to the tragedy in Khojaly.

In his conclusion, Polad Bulbuloglu wished young Azerbaijanis, many of which are studying at prestigious universities in Russia, to become good specialists, valuable people to their homeland, and never forget about happened in the Azerbaijani Karabakh land and be able to bring the truth of Azerbaijan to the whole world.

Speaking at the event, the secretary general of the Youth Forum of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC) Elshad Iskenderov also noted the importance of the international campaign initiated by Leyla Aliyeva.

"During the year, the campaign "Justice for Khojaly" acquired the scale and drew into its orbit thousands of participants. The main mechanism of the campaign became the website justiceforkhojaly.org. Today starts a new stage of implementing this idea, taking into account that a large number of people worldwide have supported our activity - national coordinators of the program work in 25 countries. Khojaly pain should not remain oppressive fact in the collective consciousness of only the people of Azerbaijan. Non-recognition of this truth by the world community will have disastrous consequences.

The world must recognize the tragic events as genocide and share the pain of our people. The aim of the new phase is the international recognition of the tragedy of Khojaly. The site includes a petition, which is designed so that anyone on the planet would be able to send a short message, which reflects the essence of what happened in Khojaly, and ask world leaders to recognize the tragedy as a crime against humanity ", said Elshad Iskenderov.

He expressed the confidence that in such way will be collected many signatures and 10 December, World Human Rights Day, they will be sent to the recipients - the Heads of State and Government of the OSCE Minsk Group, the leading international organizations, parliaments of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, UN Secretary-General.

"I am sure that the appeal of citizens of the world, regardless of nationality and religion, which expresses the pain of our people will not be overlooked", said the representative of the youth organization of the OIC.

Armenian military forces committed genocide acts in the town of Khojaly, Azerbaijan, with the population of 7,000 people on Feb. 26 1992. There were 3,000 people in the town at the time of Armenian military forces' attack. Azerbaijan to file petition in Hague court over Khojaly massacre (February 22, 2011)

An appeal condemning the Khojaly massacre committed by Armenians against Azeris in 1992 will be sent to a UN war-crimes tribunal in The Hague, a group implementing the Justice for Khojaly campaign has said.

Elshad Iskandarov, secretary-general of the Islamic Conference Youth Forum for Dialogue and Cooperation (ICYFDC), said on Monday that petitions being signed online and by other means as part of the campaign will be forwarded to the Hague court this year.

"The Hague tribunal is of great importance for providing a legal assessment to the Khojaly tragedy," Iskandarov said.

He said that while one of the goals of the Justice for Khojaly campaign is to collect legal evidence and expose distorted information concerning the massacre, another purpose is to foster a political basis for duly assessing the developments.

"This political basis is being prepared within our organization. OIC [Organization of the Islamic Conference] foreign ministers and parliamentary assembly have [already] passed such a decision. We are now working for another resolution to be issued by the OIC heads of state. If 57 of the 190 UN member states put forth political will, this will provide a substantial basis for a fair assessment of the genocide."

Iskandarov said research on the Khojaly massacre has been carried out and new documents revealed. "An objective report on the massacre will be drafted next year and submitted to international organizations."

This year, events are planned as part of the Justice for Khojaly campaign in a number of leading universities worldwide, he said.

"Flash-mob events will be held in a total of about 30 universities in Houston, Berlin and Potsdam. During these events some 100,000 signatures are to be collected."

Iskandarov said presentations of the campaign will be held in over 40 capitals and cities.

The campaign, which was launched in February 2009 at the initiative of Leyla Aliyeva, the Forum's senior coordinator, aims to inform the world community about the tragedy and condemn the atrocities both on the nationwide and international scale. It is ongoing with the contribution of hundreds of volunteers and covers over 30 OIC member states, European and Latin American countries.

Thousands of Azerbaijani civilians were slain by Armenian armed forces in the Khojaly region with the support of Russian troops on February 25-26, 1992. 613 people were brutally killed, including 106 women, 63 children and 70 elderly. 1,275 were taken captives, while 487 became handicapped and 190 went missing.

Azerbaijan and Armenia fought a lengthy war that ended with the signing of a cease-fire in 1994. 20 percent of Azerbaijan's territory, including Nagorno Karabakh and seven adjacent districts, has been under Armenian occupation since then. OSCE-brokered peace talks have been largely fruitless so far.

He pointed out the Armenian aggression could not break the will of the Azerbaijani people and stop the country`s political, economic and cultural development.

Chairman of the Mexico-Azerbaijan interparliamentary friendship group, Marcos Peres said the commemoration of the anniversary of Khojaly genocide demonstrates fraternal relations between the two countries` peoples. Peres spoke of the history of the Khojaly tragedy, stressing that the international community condemned this brutal aggression and demanded the invaders to leave immediately the occupied territories of Azerbaijan. He noted Mexico, committing to peace and friendly relations among peoples, human rights and norms and principles of international law, proved that it does not remain indifferent to the Khojaly tragedy. European digital magazine publishes article about “Justice for Khojaly” campaign (February 28, 2012)

European “EU reporter” digital magazine has published an article on the 20th anniversary of the Khojaly genocide.

The article by Colin Stevens is titled “Justice for Khojaly”. The article says: “‘The term ‘frozen’ doesn’t reflect the situation around the protracted conflict in and around the Nagorno-Karabakh region of Azerbaijan. We find it misleading, it is not adequate and status-quo can’t be kept infinitely’ the Ambassador of Azerbaijan to the EU, Emin Eyyubov, told EU Reporter. ‘We have consciously chosen a civilized way of solving the conflict through diplomacy, but this way requires a lot of work and solidarity of international community, of all those, who reject the violence as an argument we do’. On the eve of the commemoration of the most atrocious episode of the Nagorno-Karabakh war, the Khojaly massacre, the focus is once again on the problems of conflict. During the recent visit of the President of Azerbaijan Ilham Aliyev to NATO headquarters in Brussels, he once again expressed ‘a hope that this conflict will be resolved as soon as possible’. He reminded his audience that there is a very good legal basis for that, including the four UN Security Council resolutions demanding the immediate withdrawal of Armenian troops from occupied territories of Azerbaijan.

Nevertheless the cause requires more than resolutions from the West to make things move, especially acknowledging the great aspiration for justice and freedom among young generation of Azerbaijanis.

The tragedy that took place on cold winter night 20 years ago is not just a page in history books for them. Khojaly became a symbol engraved in their hearts: Today Azerbaijan’s youth is actively involved in an international civil awareness campaign ‘Justice for Khojaly!’ initiated by Mrs. Leyla Aliyeva, General Coordinator of Islamic Conference Youth Forum for Dialogue and Cooperation.

A modern and prosperous society, Azerbaijan remains profoundly sensitive towards the memories of the children, women and elderly people that lost their lives while attempting to flee the small town of Khojaly, which had been taken over by Armenian military on the night of 25-26 February 1992.

613 people, including more than hundred children, either died under gunfire, perished in the mountains from cold and exhaustion, or were buried under the ruins of the buildings collapsed by shellfire and whose bodies were never recovered. The young generation is not prepared to forget those who vanished as ‘casualties of war’ On contrary, there is a conviction that only through acknowledgment of crimes of the past one can move on to reconciliation to build a better future.

The aspiration of 'Justice for Khojaly' is a campaign like no other, because it reflects visions and hopes of a young generation who never experienced the horrors of war. For campaigners the call for the acknowledgment of genocide committed at Khojaly is an integral part of the process of reconciliation over the war.

'Although, for Azerbaijanis it is not a pre-condition for negotiations around the conflict' - continues Mr.Eyyubov. -'They are ready to build trust and confidence with Armenia in spite of tragic events in the past with the hope that it will lead soon to the liberation of the occupied territories'.

'Our president underlined on numerous occasions that Nagorno-Karabakh will be given largest autonomy possible, based on world and also European best practice, as we cited previously as an example Tyrol in Italy'.

'Further, the position of the European Parliament and European Institutions has a palpable impact, but nevertheless the cause of events could move on at faster pace in resolving Nagorno-Karabakh conflict. As life is passes by, some of those who survived the tragedy have passed away.'

'We have an obligation to give those expelled the possibility to return to their homes, we can't allow it to fall into oblivion, which is largely expected by Armenian side, as we presume', - says the Ambassador. 'We also have to deal with the crimes in the past, like the Khojaly massacre, for the sake of better future'. 'Srebrenica' is qualified as genocide by International Criminal Tribunal in The Hague (ICTY), while the tragedy in Khojaly is awaiting for the judgment of the international community. Nowadays, 20 years after the tragedy, Europe should stand tall for its values in case of the Khojaly massacre to give it an adequate judgment. The approach to human tragedies should be not selective, but universal."

“Justice for Khojaly” exhibition ends in Israel (February 25, 2014)

The Shimon Peres Center in Tel Aviv hosted a commemoration event on the occasion of the 22nd anniversary of the Khojaly Tragedy and the 5th anniversary of “Justice for Khojaly” campaign, initiated by the Heydar Aliyev Foundation.

The ceremony was attended by Deputy Interior Minister Faina Kirschenbaum and Knesset members Fouad Ben-Eliezer, Rina Frenkel, Constantine Razvozov, public figures and media representatives. The Israeli politicians emphasized that it was one of the most horrifying tragedies of the 20th century. Yegana Salman, Director of the Azerbaijani Cultural Center in Israel, opened the event to highlight the work done by the Association “AzIs”. She thanked all those in Israel for their activities as part of “Justice for Khojaly” campaign.

Alex Miller, President of the Azerbaijan-Israel Association (AzIs), presented to MP Fuad Muradov the Memory Book with reviews of the Israelis who had visited the “Justice for Khojaly” exhibition. Organizers of the exhibition, emphasized Miller, call the Memory Book the biggest reward for their work because it contains no formal notes. “Each line is shot through with sincerity and empathy for innocent people suffering from raving nationalists.”

In his speech, Fuad Muradov recalled how the idea to organize the exhibition was started. He described the work of the Heydar Aliyev Foundation and the Justice for Khojaly campaign initiated by Leyla Aliyeva to bring truth about the tragedy to the world. Muradov said: “We did not take over anything and we do not want anything belonging to others. We have received a million refugees and we have just recently formed more or less suitable conditions for life. But they really want to return home...Aggression and violence brought Armenia no good. The country is on the edge of bankruptcy. We do not wish anything bad for the Armenian people, we only wish them good and welfare. But as long as the government of Armenia is run by corruptionists and aggressors, welfare of the nation and peace with Azerbaijan are a big question. We are ready for a dialogue but there are many forces opposed to peaceful co-existence of Azerbaijan and Armenia today.” “However, those forces must know that Azerbaijan is different now and it would not allow more blood of its citizens to be spilt...”

Then, the documentary “Corridor Without End” shot by the Lithuanian film director Mindaugas Urbonavichius was screened.

Award-winning Khojaly documentary screened in Brussels (February 25, 2016)

Multi-award-winning independent documentary Endless Corridor – a US/Lithuanian co-production – was shown at BOZAR – Centre of Fine Arts in Brussels. The screening, organised within the Justice for Khojaly campaign, commemorated the victims of the Khojaly Massacre on 26 February 1992. This was the worst single atrocity of the Armenia–Azerbaijan conflict over Nagorno-Karabakh and claimed the lives of 613 civilian victims in 1992. The death toll included 106 women, 63 children and 70 elderly people.

Following its international premiere throughout 2015, Endless Corridor has received plaudits from critics across the world. Marc Verwilghen, Director of TEAS Benelux explained: “TEAS is more than proud to organise this event within the framework of the Justice for Khojaly campaign, which is an international awareness campaign initiated by Mrs Leyla Aliyeva, Vice-President of the Heydar Aliyev Foundation. The Justice for Khojaly international campaign was launched on 8 May 2008. The campaign’s rapid development is a measure of international support for the restoration of justice in the region. This support has been expressed at events in over 100 countries in Europe, America, Asia and Africa, and has come from individuals and international organisations, as well as states.”

“Endless Corridor is a film that came about because Richard Lapaitis, a Lithuanian journalist and witness of the horror of Khojaly, could not let the experience lie or forget the people who survived. He returned with a touching and human desire to find out how the survivors coped with memories of loved ones killed before their eyes. Russian journalist Victoria Ivleva was also reunited with Mehriban, a mother whose two-day-old baby she had saved in the chaos. The stories are of ordinary people whose lives were devastated by the Armenian invasion of their land”, Marc Verwilghen said.

Ambassador of Azerbaijan to Belgium Fuad Isgandarov recalled that the Khojaly Massacre was a terrible atrocity that occurred in February 1992. “We believe in a peaceful resolution of this conflict, and hope that the European and international community will help resolve this. Tonight, we remember Nagorno-Karabakh in the hearts and minds of the Azerbaijani people, and particularly remember the souls of those who died in Khojaly.”

Ambassador Isgandarov has also underlined that “Azerbaijani refugees and internally displaced persons (IDPs) are still unable to return to their homes and lands because of the illegal occupation of the Azerbaijani territory of Nagorno-Karabakh and seven surrounding regions by Armenia’s armed forces. Despite four UN Security Council Resolutions and 22 years of OSCE Minsk Group negotiations, there is still no progress.”

Richard Lapaitis, a Lithuanian journalist and eyewitness of the Khojaly massacre said: "Today it has been 24 years since the Khojaly tragedy. It turned out that I witnessed the events of the night from the 25th to 26th of February 1992, when Armenian troops with the support of the Russian 366th motor rifle regiment attacked 6,000 civilians of the town of Khojaly in the Nagorno-Karabakh region of Azerbaijan."

"The name of the film Endless Corridor does not only describe the terrible Armenian military plan and the whole situation of the massacre, but it also means that until now, the justice for Khojaly has not been done. I am honoured to witness tonight in Brussels about Khojaly. I am a war correspondent for 25 years and until now, I actively work with Azerbaijani IDPs and refugees from the Nagorno-Karabakh region", Lapaitis concluded.

The programme of the event also included an outstanding classical music performance by Nazrin Rashidova, Azerbaijani violinist, soloist, recitalist, chamber musician and orchestral director.

Despite the passing of four UN Security Council resolutions against the invasion, Armenia continues to occupy Nagorno-Karabakh and seven surrounding districts to this day. Currently nearly 20 per cent of Azerbaijani territory remains occupied, and nearly one million refugees and internally displaced persons remain spread across Azerbaijan.

Khojaly – a tragic artistic inspiration – highlighted in Westminster Parliament (February 23, 2017)

The month of February is always filled with sorrow in Azerbaijan, and amongst those around the world who support the rule of law and the sanctity of human life. This is because, 25 years ago, that month saw the single worst atrocity of the Armenian–Azerbaijani conflict over Nagorno-Karabakh. The Khojaly Massacre took the lives of 613 civilians. The death toll included 106 women, 63 children and 70 elderly people.

Despite this tragedy, and many other instances of unimaginable brutality, Azerbaijan always looks for peaceful resolution of this unresolved conflict. This has been demonstrated by the recent establishment of the Platform for Peace, an Azerbaijani initiative that brings together members of Azerbaijani and Armenian civil society in an attempt to increase understanding on a human level. The same premise was the catalyst for the annual Khojaly Peace Prize for Art – an initiative of the Justice for Khojaly campaign, under the auspices of The European Azerbaijan Society (TEAS) – that seeks to represent the horrors of the tragedy through art. Launched in 2016, and now in its second year, this prize continues to channel the creativity of art students living in the UK.

The prizes were awarded on 22 February amidst the historic surroundings of the Strangers’ Dining Room in the House of Commons before a gathering of over 100 multinational Londoners, TEAS told APA.

Selected from over 70 entrants, the judging panel for the art prize comprised the Rt Hon Baroness Sayeeda Warsi; Baroness Zahida Manzoor; Bob Blackman MP, Chair, Azerbaijan All-Party Parliamentary Group (APPG); Sabina Rakcheyeva, Cultural Advisor, TEAS; and Lionel Zetter, Director, TEAS.

Jack Pegoraro, Director, TEAS London, commented: “During the Armenian–Azerbaijani conflict, all ethnic Azerbaijanis were either killed or forced to flee Nagorno-Karabakh and the seven surrounding regions. One of the defining moments was on 26 February when 613 unarmed civilians – men, women and children – were killed by invading Armenian forces. It is now the 25th anniversary of this tragedy, and no one has been brought to justice. The purpose of events like today is to commemorate the victims and to ensure that such tragedies never recur.”

Baroness Zahida Manzoor, host of the event, stated: “I was one of the judges of the competition. During my visit to Azerbaijan, with some other members of the Azerbaijani All-Party Parliamentary Group, I was very privileged to meet some of the internally displaced persons (IDPs) from the Nagorno-Karabakh region. It was terrible to hear some of their very sad stories. Despite the terror they had experienced, there was hope, love and harmony. They were seeking peace and resolution for the future. I was deeply moved and touched by those experiences.

“Hosting this event is very meaningful – it is about the future of humanity. When we see such atrocities around the world, we must speak up and share our thoughts. By speaking with one voice, we can address those issues with which we don’t agree.

“All these paintings show some element of hope. In some, you can see the peace and love. In others, you can see eyes that are full of despair and sadness. In others, there are wings of the dove of peace, as we all share the same humanity and seek to move forward. It has been very difficult to decide on the winners of the Khojaly Peace Prize for Art, but all the paintings spoke of the need for resolution and peace.”

Baroness Sayeeda Warsi announced the prize winners. First prize was taken by British-born Louisa Marriott, a student at the Norwich University of the Arts, for her painting Tranquillity of Movement. In her acceptance speech, she commented: “My art is very political, and I want it to push towards change and positively affect the world. My painting commemorates the 63 children who died in Khojaly, but their faces are those of today’s refugees. Hopefully it will help us become more compassionate to the plight of refugees.”

Despite the passing of four UN Security Council resolutions against the invasion, Armenia continues to occupy Nagorno-Karabakh and seven surrounding regions to this day. Currently nearly 20 per cent of Azerbaijani territory remains occupied, and approximately one million refugees and internally displaced persons (IDPs) are spread across Azerbaijan. The evening was dedicated to the memory of the Khojaly victims and those Azerbaijanis who have only one wish – to return to their homes and lands.

25 years of Khojaly tragedy commemorated in Luxembourg (February 24, 2017)

The month of February is always filled with sorrow in Azerbaijan, and amongst those around the world who support the rule of law and the sanctity of human life. This is because, 25 years ago, that month saw the single worst atrocity of the Armenian–Azerbaijani conflict over Nagorno-Karabakh. The Khojaly massacre took the lives of 613 civilians. The death toll included 106 women, 63 children and 70 elderly people.

The Khojaly commemoration concert at the well-known Le Royal hotel in Luxembourg on 23 February 2017, organised by the Benelux office of The European Azerbaijan Society (TEAS), within the Justice for Khojaly campaign, commemorated the victims of the Khojaly massacre, which occurred on 26 February 1992.

Various classical and contemporary works by Azerbaijani, German, Russian and French composers were performed by the pianist Nezrin Efendiyeva, accompanied by Astrid Gallez (transverse flute) and Marie-Carmen Suarez (violin), TEAS told APA.

Speaking before the audience of 130 politicians, VIPs, students and press representatives, TEAS Benelux Director Marc Verwilghen explained: “TEAS is organising these events within the framework of the Justice for Khojaly campaign. This is an international awareness campaign initiated by Mrs Leyla Aliyeva, Vice-President of the Heydar Aliyev Foundation.”

“The Khojaly massacre was the worst single atrocity of the Armenia–Azerbaijan conflict over Nagorno-Karabakh and claimed the lives of 613 Azerbaijani civilian victims in 1992. The death toll included 106 women, 63 children and 70 elderly people. The Armenian perpetrators of this atrocity are well known and they have to be brought to justice. We believe that judicial action against these perpetrators is possible with success, even before the International Criminal Court (ICC) in The Hague. Azerbaijani refugees and internally displaced persons (IDPs) are still housed in camps across the country. In a nation of 9.7 million people, this amount is one of the highest levels of displacement per capita in the world”, Mr Verwilghen said.

His Excellency Fuad Isgandarov, Azerbaijani Ambassador to Luxembourg, Belgium and the EU, recalled that the Khojaly Massacre was a terrible atrocity that occurred in February 1992. He said: “Azerbaijan is very well known for its tolerance, rich cultural heritage and European values. I am glad to say that the Azerbaijan Democratic Republic, thus making Azerbaijan the first Muslim-majority country ever to enfranchise women, introduced universal suffrage in Azerbaijan already in 1918. This is one of the numerous examples of the Azerbaijani pro-European orientation. The 613 victims from Khojaly were not only Azerbaijani, they were also European!”

Despite the passing of four UN Security Council resolutions against the invasion, Armenia continues to occupy Nagorno-Karabakh and seven surrounding regions to this day. Currently nearly 20 per cent of Azerbaijani territory remains occupied, and approximately one million refugees and internally displaced persons (IDPs) are spread across Azerbaijan. The evening was dedicated to the memory of the Khojaly victims and those Azerbaijanis who have only one wish – to return to their homes and lands.
